

WEEK 2 TERM 3 2019

Kia ora koutou Tinui whānau and friends!

As promised I am sitting in Waitangi writing my "bit" for the newsletter.

The conference I have been attending this week was entitled 'Doing it the Kiwi Way'. We Kiwi's are notorious for doing things differently and solving problems by looking outside the box. This week as well as networking with principals from schools like ours, size wise, it has really hit me how lucky we are at Tinui School. All of our kids come to school clean, with food in their lunch boxes and have a solid nuclear family of a mum and dad. This in itself gives our kids an awesome headstart compared with many other kids in New Zealand. This social advantage means that they come to school with very little emotional baggage and school is a place to come to to have fun, learn and hang out with their friends. For some kids at other schools, school is a safe place where they feel cared for, are fed and given love that they miss out on at home for lots of different reasons. One speaker at this conference talked about why we behave the way we do and focused on the fact that our brain is a very complex organ and is designed to, amongst other things, primarily keep us alive and our behaviours are directly related to that primal instinct of survival. When I step back and look at the behaviour of kids and adults over my time in education, I now have an understanding that many behaviours I have observed and will observe in the future are directly related to that survival instinct. It does not change that the behaviour may be inappropriate or others are harmed by it but it does help me understand why it is happening. This is a very simple blurb on a massively complex topic but the value of attending this conference this year is great and will be transferred into my teaching and leadership practice in the future. I will share some of the content of the keynote speakers over the next couple of weeks.

Finally our Board of Trustees meeting did not proceed on Monday but it will be held at 1pm on Sunday the 4th.

Have a great weekend and stay warm.

If you need to contact me please do so at school or on principal@tinui.school.nz

Have a great weekend!
